Introduction

In 1944, the Academic Copying Office in Oxford published an unknown (but presumably small) number of copies of an anonymous, twenty-page booklet titled Sir Orfeo. The first sixteen pages of this booklet comprise a version of the Middle English poem that, while based for the most part on the text of the fourteenth-century Auchinleck Manuscript, has been altered and emended throughout in accordance with the grammar of the earlier South-Eastern dialect of Middle English. The result is a Middle English version of the poem that is not only, as the booklet’s author observes, “much more metrical” than that of Auchinleck, but that—if the author’s theory that the poem was composed in Essex in the thirteenth century is accurate—is closer to what must have been the original form of the poem than are any of the three surviving manuscripts, which have been “infected . . . with the forms of later language and different dialect.”

Although the booklet itself does not bear its author’s name, it has been identified as a work by J.R.R. Tolkien. In their J.R.R. Tolkien: A Descriptive Bibliography, Wayne G. Hammond and Douglas A. Anderson note of this booklet that one of the five known copies, held by the English Faculty library at Oxford, “contains a note, reported to be in Tolkien’s hand, which states that this edition of ‘Sir Orfeo’ was prepared for the naval cadets’ course in English, which Tolkien organized in January 1943 and directed until the end of March 1944” (209). Hammond and Anderson further report the existence of three other copies of the booklet in which the lines of the poem have been numbered in pencil, by tens, in what appears to be Tolkien’s hand. Two of these copies have in addition a few textual emendations in pencil, again apparently in Tolkien’s hand. It is upon one of these two emended copies that the present edition is based.
J.R.R. Tolkien’s Middle English version and Modern English translation

The attribution to Tolkien of this Middle English version of Sir Orfeo and its brief accompanying note is further supported by certain similarities with Tolkien’s Modern English verse translation of Sir Orfeo and its brief accompanying note, published posthumously in the book Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, Pearl, and Sir Orfeo (23, 123–37).² Both notes locate the composition of the poem in “the South-East of England,”² and both notes use precisely the same phrase in describing the transmission of the poem as having been subject to “the corruptions of error and forgetfulness.”³

Comparison of the poems themselves reveals, in addition to striking correspondences of formatting and punctuation,³ a number of instances in which Tolkien’s translation departs from the texts of the surviving manuscripts in precisely the same manner that the Middle English version does:

(In the following comparisons, V = the Middle English version of the booklet, T = Tolkien’s translation, A = Auchinleck MS, H = MS Harley 3810. Both V and T use A as the source for all lines except 1–24 and 33–46, which are supplied by H.)

1. 4:— H has frely pinge where V has ferly thing. In his note on this line Sisam glosses frely as “goodly,” and remarks that the Lai le Freine (a poem of the Auchinleck MS that has essentially the same opening lines as the H version of Sir Orfeo) has here ferly, which he glosses as “wondrous” (209). In his companion Vocabulary, Tolkien glosses frely in Sisam’s text as “pleasant” (< OE fréolic of the same meaning) and ferly in Sisam’s note as “wonderful” (< OE fårice “suddenly”), corresponding to a noun of the same form that he glosses as “marvel.” T has “marvellous thing,” suggesting that the ME form underlying the translation is ferly, and hence agreeing with V against the MS.

1. 82:— A has out of hir witt “out of her wit” where V (correcting a defective rhyme) has out of mende “out of mind.” T has “out of mind.”

11. 241, 245, 249:— A has He pat hadde ywerd “He that had worn,” He pat hadde had castels “He that had had castles,” and He pat hadde yhad kniżes “He that had had knights,” respectively, each a relative construction employing the pronoun pat. V has He hadde ywered “He had worn,” He hadde had castels “He had had castles,” and He hadde yhad kniżes “He had had knights,” respectively, in each case dropping the relative pronoun (presumably to improve the meter). T has “He once had . . . worn,” “He once had castles,” and “He once had many a . . . knight,” respectively, like V omitting the relative “that.”
l. 265:— A has His here of his berd, blac “His hair of his beard, black” where V has His her and berd, all blake “His hair and beard, all black.” T has “His hair and beard all black.”

l. 368:— A has was all of burnist gold “was all of burnished gold,” while V has was maked al of burnissed golde “was made all of burnished gold.” T has “was builded all of burnished gold.”

l. 381:— A has what he wold haue ydo “what he would have done,” while V (correcting a defective rhyme) has what his wille were “what his will were.” T has “what might be his will.”

l. 392:— A has non armes nade “no arms had,” while V has no fet no armes nadde “no feet nor arms had.” T has “[had] no arms, nor feet.”

Other examples could be cited, but these are the most striking. It should be noted that there are instances where the translation agrees with the MS against the Middle English version (e.g., in l. 419, A has “O lord, he seyd, 3if it bi wille were” where V has “and seide: O lord, if thi wille were”; while T has “O lord, said he, ‘if it be thy will’”), and it must be allowed that a verse translation necessarily makes concessions to language and meter that may obscure or falsely emphasize details of the relationship between the source(s) and the translation. Nonetheless, these examples strongly suggest that Tolkien’s translation of Sir Orfeo was based at least in part on the booklet’s emended Middle English version.

The date of Tolkien’s Modern English translation of Sir Orfeo does not appear to have been established with much precision. Christopher Tolkien wrote, in his Preface to Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, Pearl, and Sir Orfeo only that it was, like the c. 1944 Pearl and the c.1950 Sir Gawain, “also made many years ago” (7). Concerning Basil Blackwell’s ultimately unrealized plans of c. 1942-44 to publish Tolkien’s translation of Pearl, see Hammond and Anderson’s Bibliography (321-23). The Bodleian Library catalogue of its Tolkien manuscript holdings has the following entry: “A33/1 Typescript and manuscript transcripts and translations of Sir Orfeo [fols. 1-47], with . . . various drafts of the translation of Pearl, with . . . letters from (Sir) Basil Blackwell about the translation, 1942-4”; but while it may be more than mere archival accident that Tolkien’s “transcripts and translations of Sir Orfeo” are located with letters of 1942-44 concerning his work on another Middle English poem, this evidence is circumstantial at best. Humphrey Carpenter’s statement that “Tolkien had originally translated [Sir Orfeo] for a wartime cadets’ course at Oxford” (141) would, if accurate, seem to demonstrate that Tolkien produced both his Middle English version and his translation of Sir Orfeo for the naval cadets’ course, i.e., c. 1943-44. But it may be that Carpenter has simply confused Tolkien’s translation with the present Middle English version.
However, that Tolkien’s translation appears to be based at least in part on his Middle English version of 1944 strongly suggests that it was made in or after 1944. There is in addition one piece of evidence internal to the translation that suggests very strongly that it was made before 1945: lines 363–64 of the translation (“The vault was carven and adorned / with beasts and birds and figures horned”) show that when he translated them Tolkien still read animal “animal” in l. 364 for a form that was corrected to aumal “enamel” in a 1945 revision to his Middle English Vocabulary (see the Appendix below for details). If the translation was in fact based on his 1944 Middle English version of the poem, it is then very likely that the translation was likewise made in, or not long before, 1944.

Tolkien’s version and Sisam’s edition

In 1922, Tolkien published A Middle English Vocabulary, his first book, which comprised a complete glossary of the Middle English poems included by his colleague and former tutor Kenneth Sisam in his Fourteenth Century Verse and Prose, which was first published the previous year. (Tolkien’s Vocabulary was intended to be published together with Sisam’s collection as a single volume, but delays in the Vocabulary’s preparation resulted in their separate initial publications.) Among the poems in Sisam’s collection is an edition of Sir Orfeo. Tolkien’s version follows Sisam’s edition very closely, not only in formatting and punctuation, but also in sharing certain readings that, according to Bliss, are original to Sisam’s edition, as well as in adopting most of Sisam’s editorial revisions and suggestions.

(In the following comparisons, V = Tolkien’s Middle English version of the booklet, S = Sisam’s edition, A = Auchinleck MS, H = MS Harley 3810. Both S and V use A as the source for all lines except 1–24 and 33–46, which are supplied by H.)

Sisam notes that the “original text preserved final -e better than the extant MSS” (208), and provides the following examples of “restored” readings:

1. 119:— And seyd<ê> þus þe king<ê> to
2. 172:— Þat noþing help<ê> þe no schal
3. 357:— Al þe vt<ê> mast<ê> wæl
4. 466:— So, sir, as ze seyd<ê> nouþê

Tolkien’s version of these lines agrees with Sisam’s restoration of final -e precisely. It seems possible to suppose that Tolkien’s impetus to produce an emended version of Sir Orfeo originated in this note.
Tolkien’s Middle English Sir Orfeo

1. 4—H, S have frely “goodly,” but Sisam notes that “Lai le Freine has ferly ‘wondrous’” (208). V has ferly.

1. 12—H has moost to lowe, which S emends to moost o loue based on the corresponding line of the Lai le Freine (208). V has moost of loue.

1. 20—H, S have Maden layes and saf’ it name. Sisam remarks that the “curious use of it after the plural layes is perhaps not original” (209). V has sg. lay.

1. 46—H, S have Suche ioy and melody in his hartpyng is. Sisam remarks that “joy and overload the verse, and are probably an unskilful addition to the text” (209). V has such melodie. . . .

1. 82—S has reuey<se>d but Sisam suggests that “some such form of ravished is probably right” (209). V has rauissed.

ll. 157–8: A, S have the rhymes palays: ways. Sisam suggests that the original rhyme was “perhaps palys: wys ‘wise.’” V has palise: wise.

1. 247—A, S have comensi. Of this line, Sisam notes that “the metre points to a disyllabic form . . . comsi” (209 n. 57). V has cômsi.

1. 285—S, V have dim. Bliss notes that Sisam was the first to print dim, where earlier editors had written dun (53).

1. 333—A has wroche, which S emends to wreche (and was apparently the first to do so, judging by Bliss’s note [53] in which he takes Sisam to task for emending what he notes is a genuine form). V has wreche.

1. 363—A has auowed, which S emends to anow<rn>ed, a reading adopted by Tolkien as V’s anourned.

1. 419—A, S have “O lord, he seyd, ‘iif it *pi wille were.’” Sisam remarks that this line is too long metrically, and suggests that it may once have been: “And seyd ‘Lord, iif pi wille were’” (210 n. 382). V has “and seide: ‘O lord, iif thi wille were’.”

1. 483—A has “Bot wi a begger ybilt ful narwe,” which S emends to “Bot wi a begger y<n> bilt ful narwe.” Sisam explains that “ybilt of the MS. and editors cannot well be a pp. meaning ‘housed.’ I prefer to take bilt as sb. = bild, build “a building”; and to suppose that y has been miswritten for ý, the contraction for yn” (211). V has “but with a begger in bilt ful narwe.”

Taken together, these comparisons indicate that Tolkien’s Middle English version of Sir Orfeo was based on Kenneth Sisam’s edition, while his Modern English translation was based on his own Middle English version; and further that the translation was, like the version, made in 1944.
Sir Orfeo

We reden ofte and finde ywrite,
as clerkes don us to wite,
the layes that ben of harping
ben yfounde of ferly thing.
Sum ben of wele, and sum of wo,
and sum of ioye and merthe also;
sum of trecherie, and sum of gile,
and sum of happes that fallen by while;
sum of bourdes, and sum of ribaudrie,
and sum ther ben of the fairie.
Of alle thing that men may se,
moost of loue forsothe they be.
In Britain thise layes arn ywrite,
first yfounde and forth ygete,
of aventure that fillen by dayes,
wherof Britouns made her layes.
When they owther mighte yheren
of aventure that ther weren,
they toke her harpes tho with game,
maden lay and ʃaf it name.
Of aventure that han befall
I can sum telle but nouʃt alle.
Herkne, lordinges that ben trewe,
and I wol ʃou telle of Sir Orphewe.

Orfeo was yore a king,
in Ingelond a heʃ lording,
a stalworth man and hardi bo,
large and curteis he was also.
His fader was cœmen of King Pluto,
and his moder com of King Iuno,
that sum time were as godes holde
for aventure that thai dede and tolde.
[Orpheo most of onything
loued the gle of harping;
siker was euery god harpoure
of him to haue moche honour.
Himselue loued for to harpe
and laide theron his witte scharpe.
He lerned so, ther nothing was a better harpoun in no plas; in the world was neuer man yborn that euer Orpheo sat beforne, and he miȝte of hys harping here, he schulde thinke that he were in one of the ioyes of Paradis, suche melodie in his harping is.]

This king soiourned in Traciens, that was a citeso of noble defens; for Winchester was cleped theo Traciens withouten no.

He hadde with him a quen of pris, that was ycleped Dame Heurodis, the fairest leuedi for the nones that miȝte gon on bodi and bones, ful of loue and godenesse; ac no man may telle hir fairnesse.

Bifel in the cômessen of May, when miri and hot is the day, and oway beth winter-schoures, and eueri feld is ful of floures, and blosme breme on eueri bouȝ oueral wexeth miri anouȝ, this iche quen, Dame Heurodis, tok to hir maidenes two of pris and wente hir in an vndrentide to playe bi an orchard-side, to se the floures sprede and springe, and to yhere the foules singe.

Thai sette hem doune alle thre vnder a fair ympe-tre, and wel sone this faire quene fel on slepe opon the grene. The maidnes durste hir nouȝt awake, but lete hir ligge and reste take. So sche slepe til afternon, that vndertide was al ydon. Ac as sone as sche gan awake, sche cride and lothli bere gan make, sche frioted hir honden and hir fet, and crached hir visage, it bledde wet; hir riche robe hye al torende, and was rauissed out of mende.
The two maidnes hir biside
no durste with hir leng abide,
but ounrne to the palais riȝt
and tolde bothe squier and kniȝt
that her quen awede wolde,
and bade hem go and hir atholde.
Kniȝtes and leuedis ounrne tho
sexti damiseles and mo;
in the orchard to the quen hye come,
and her vp in her armes nome,
to bed hye brouȝte hir atte laste,
and helde hir there fine faste;
ac euer sche held in one cri,
and wolde vp and wende owy.

When Orféo herde that tiding, neuer him nas wers for no thing.
He com with kniȝtes tene
to chaumbre riȝt biforn the quene,
and biheld, and seide with grete pitee:
“O leue lif, what is tee,
that euer þet hast ben so stille,
and now gredest wonder schille?
Thi bodi, that was so whit ycore,
with thine nailes is al totore.
Alas! thi rōde, that was so red,
is now al wan as thou were ded;
and also thine fingres smale
beth al blodi and al pale.
Alas! thi louesome eyȝen two loketh so man doth on his fō.
A! dame, ich biseche merci.
Let ben al this rewful cri,
and tel me what the is, and hou,
and what thing may the helpe now”.

Tho lay sche stille atte laste,
and gan to wepe swithe faste,
and seide thus the kinge to:

“Allas! mi lord, Sir Orféo, seththen we first togider were,
ones wrothe neuer we nere,
but euer ich haue ylōued the
as mi lif, and so thou me.
Ac now we mote dele atwo;
do thi beste, for I mot go”.

“Allas!” quath he, “lorlorn icham.
Whider wiltow go, and to wham?
Whider thou gost, ichil with the,
and whider I go, thou schalt with me”.

“Nay, nay, sir, that nouȝt nis.
Ichil the telle al hou it is:
as ich lay in this vnder tide,
and slepe vnder our orchard-side,
ther come to me two faire kniȝtes
wel y-armed al to riȝtes,
and bade me cõmen an hijing
and speke with her lord the king.
And ich answerde at wordes bolde,
I durste nouȝt, no I nolde.
Thai priked oȝain as thai miȝte drie;
the com her king also bliue,
with an hundred kniȝtes and mo,
and damiseles an hundred also,
alle on snow-white stedes;
as white as milk were her wedes:
I no seiȝ neuer ÿt bifoþre
so faire creatures ycore.
The king a croune hadde on his molde,
it nas of siluer, no of rede golde,
ac it was al on precious ston,
as briȝte so the sõnne it schon.
And as sone as he to me cam,
wolde ich, nolde ich, he me nam,
and made me with him ride
opon a palfray bi his side,
and brouȝte me to his palise
wel atired in iche wise,
and schewed me castels and tours,
riuere, forest, frith with flours,
and his riche stedes ichon;
and seþthen me brouȝte oȝain hom
into our owen orchard,
and seide to me thus afterward:
“Loke, dame, that tow be
to-morwe her vnder this ympe-tre,
and than thou schalt with ous go,
and liue with ous euermo;
and jif thou makest ous ylet,
whar thou be, thou worst ylet,
and totore thine limes al,
that nothing helpe the no schal;
and thei thou best so totorn,
jet thou worst with ous yborn’.”

When King Órfeo herde this cas, “O we!” quath he, “allas! allas!
Leuer me were to lete mi lif
than thus to lese the quen mi wif!”
He asked conseil at iche man,
ac no man helpe him no can.

Amorwe the vnertide is côme,
and Orfeo hath his armes nôme,
and wel ten hundred kniȝt with him,
ic h y-armed stout and grim;
and with the quene wenten he riȝt vnto that vmpe-tre.
Thai made scheltrôm in iche side,
and saide thai wolde ther abide,
and die there euerichon,
er the quen schulde fram hem gon.
Ac ȝet amiddes hem ful riȝt
the quene was oway ytwiȝt,
with faerie was forþ ynôme;
men niste wher sche was bicôme.

Tho was ther crying, wep and wo.
The king into his chaumbre is go,
and ofte swoned opon the ston,
and made swiche diol and swiche mon
that neiȝ his lif was al yspent:
ther was non amendement.

He cleped togider his barouns,
erles, lorde of renouns;
and when thai alle ycômen were,
“Lordinges”, he saide, “biforn you here
ich ordainy min heije steward
to wite mi kingdom afterward;
in mi stede ben he schal,
to kepe mi londes oueral.
For now ichaue mi quen ylore,
the fairest leuedi that euer was bore,
neuer eft I nil no woman se.
Into wildernesse ichil te,
and liue ther euermore
with wilde bestes in holtes hore.
And when ʒe vnnderstonde that I be spent,
make ʒou than a parlement,
and chese ʒou a newe king.
Now doth ʒour best with al mi thing.
Tho was ther weping in the halle

220
and gret cri among hem alle;
vnnethe miʃten olde or ŋonge
for weping speke a word with ŏnge.
Thai kneled adoune alle yfere,
and praide him, ʒif his wille were,
that he no schulde fram hem go.
“Do way!” quath he, “it schal be so”.
Al his kingdom he forsok;
but a sclauine on him he tok;
he nadde no kirtel, no no hod,
scherte, no non other god.

230
But his harpe he took algate,
and dede him barfot out of ʒate;
no man moste with him go.
O way! what ther was wep and wo,
when he that er was king with croune
wente so pouerlich out of toune!
Thurgh wode and ouer heth
into the wildernesse he geth.
Nothing he fint that him is aise,

240
but euer he liueth in gret malaise.
He hadde ywered fow and grís,
and on bedde purpre bis;
now on harde heth he lith,
with leues and with gresse him writh.
He hadde yhad castels and tours,
riuere, forest, frith with flours;
now theiʒ it cōmsi snewe and frese,
this king mot make his bed in mese.
He hadde yhad kniʃtes of pris

250
before him knelande, and leuedis;
now seth he nothing that him liketh,
but wilde wormes bi him striketh.
He that hadde yhad plente
of mete and drink, of ich deintee,
now may he al day digge and wrote
er he finde his fille of rote.
In sômer he liueth bi wilde frute
and berien but gode lite;
in winter may he nothing finde
but rote, grasses, and the rinde.
Al his bodi was oway ydwine
for misaise, and al to-chine.
Lord! who may tellen al the sore
this king suffred ten yer and more?
His her and berd, al blake and rowe,
to his girdelstede were growe.
His harpe, whereon was al his gle,
hide in an holwe tre;
and when the weder was cler and briêt,
he took his harpe to him wel riêt,
and harped at his own wille.
Into alle the wode the soun gan schille,
that alle the wilde [bestes] that ther beth
for ioie abouten him thai teth;
and alle the foulès that ther were come and sete on ich a brere
to here his harping a-fine,
so miche melodie was therine;
and when he his harping lete wolde,
no best bi him abide nolde.
He müte se him bisides
oft in hote vundertides
the king o Faierie with his route
cômen hunten him al aboute,
with dim cri and blowinge,
and houndes also berkinge;
ac no best thai neuer nome,
no neuer he niste whider thai bicome.
And other while he müte him se
as a gret ost bi him te
wel atourned ten hundred kniêtès,
ich y-armed to his riêtès,
of cuntenaunce stout and fers,
with manic desplayed baners,
and ich his swerd ydrawen holde;
ac neuer he niste whider thai wolde.
And other while he seiʒ other thing:
knįstes and leuedis come dauncing
in queinte atire, gisely,
queinte pas and softly:
tabours and trumpes ʒede hem bi
and al manere menstraci.
And on a day he seiʒ him biseidle
sexti leuedis on horse ride,
gentil and iolif  as brid on ris:
nouþ t man amonges hem nis.
And ich a faucoun on honde bere,
and ridden on hauking bi o riuere.
Of game thai founde wel god haunt:
maulard, hairoun, and cormeraunt.
The foules of the water ariseth,
the faucouns hem wel deuiseth;
ich faucoun his praye slouʒ.
That seiʒ Orfeo and louʒ:
“Parfay!” quath he, “ther is fair game,
thider ichil, bi Godes name!
Ich was ywōne swiche werk to se”.
He aros and thider gan te.
To a leuedi he was ycōme,
biheld, and hath wel vndernōme,
and seth bi al thing that it is his own quen, Dame Heurodis.
ʒerne he biheld hir, and sche him ek,
ac noither to other a word no spek.
For misaise that sche on him seiʒ,
that hadde ben so riche and heiʒ,
the teres felle out of hir ēigen.
The other leuedis this yseižen,
and maked hir oway to ride,
sche most with him no leng abide.
“Allas!” quath he, “now me is wo.
Whi nil deth now me slo?
Allas! wreche, that I no miʒte
die now after thisse siʒte!
Allas! to longe last mi liʃ;
when I no dar nouþ with mi wif,
no hye to me, o word speke.
Allas! whi nil min herte breke!
Parfay!” quath he, “tide what bitide,
whider so thise leuedis ride,
the selue way ichille strecche;
of lif no deth me no recche”.

His sclauine he dede on also spac,
and heng his harpe opon his bac,
and hadde wel god wil to gon:
he no spared noither stub no ston.
In at a roche the leuedis rideth,
and he after, and nouȝt abideth.

When he was in the roche ygo
wel thre milen other mo,
he com into a fair cuntrye,
as briȝt so sōonne on sōmeres daye,
smothe and plain and al grene,
hille no dale nas non ysene.
Amidde the londe a castel he seiȝ,
riche and real and wōnder heis.
Al the vtemaste wal
was cler and schene as cristal;
an hundred tours ther were aboute,
degiseliche, and batailed stoute;
the butras com out of the diche,
of rede golde y-arched riche;
the vousour was anourned al
of ich manere diuers animal.
Withinne ther were wide wones
alle of preciouse stones.
The werste piler on to biholde
was maked al of burnissed golde.
Al that lond was euer liȝt,
for when it was the therke niȝt,
the riche stones liȝte gônne,
as briȝt as doth at none sōonne.
No man may telle, no thenche in thouȝt,
the riche werk that ther was wrouȝt;
bi alle thing him thinkth it is the proude court of Paradis.

In this castel the leuedis liȝte;
he wolde in after, ȝif he miȝte.
Orfeo knokketh atte gate,
the porter redi was therate,
and asked what his wille were.
“Parfay!” quath he, “icham harpere,
thi lord to solace with mi gle,
jif his swete wille be”.
The porter vndede the ȝate anon,
and let him in the castel gon.

Than gan he biholde abouten al,
and seiȝ ther liggeand within the wal
folk that thider were ybrouȝt,
and thouȝte dede and nere nouȝt.

Sum ther stode withouten hadde,
and sum no fet no armes nadde,
and sum thurȝ bodi hadde wounde,
and sum ther laye wode, ybounde,
and sum y-armed on horse sete,
and sum astrangled as thai ete,
and sum in water were adreinte,
and sum with fire were forschreinte.
Wiuȝes ther laye on childbedde,

sum were dede and sum awedde;
and wõnder fele ther laye bisides,
rĩȝt as thai slepe her vndertides.
Eche was thus in this warld ynôme
and thider with fairie ycôme.
Ther he seiȝ his owen wif,
Dame Heurodis, his leue lif,
slepen vnder an ympe-tre:
bì hir wede he knew that it was he.

When he biheld thise meruailes alle,
he wente into the kinges halle.

Than seiȝ he ther a semly siȝt,
a tabernacle blissful, briȝt;
therinne her maister king him sete,
and her quene, fair and swete.
Her crounes, her clothes, schine so briȝte
that vnnethe biholden hem he miȝte.

When he hadde biholden al that thing,
he kneled adoune biforn the king,
and seide: “O lord, jif thi wille were,
mi menstraci thou schulde yhere”.

The king answerde: “What man artow
that art hider ycôme now?
Ich, no non that is with me,
no sente neuer after the;
seththen that ich her regni gan,
I no fond neuer so hardi man
that hider to ous durste wende,
but that ichim walde ofsende”.
“Lord”, quath he, “trowe ful wel,
430
I nam but a pouer menestrel;
and, sir, it is the manere of ous
to seche mani a lordes hous;
thei we nouß wel côme be,
et we mot proferi forth our gle”.
Biforn the king he sat adoune,
and tok his harpe miri of soune,
and tempreth it as he wel can,
and blissfule notes he ther gan,
that alle that in the palais were
come to him for to here,
and liggeth adoune to his fete, 440
hém thenketh his melodie so swete.
The king herkneth and sitt ful stille,
to here his gle he hath god wille;
god bourde he hadde of his gle,
the riche quen also hadde he.
When he hadde stint harping,
seide to him than the king:
“Menstrel, me liketh wel thi gle.
450
Now aske of me what it be, largeliche ichil the paye.
Now speke, and tow mißt assaye”.
“Sir”, he seide, “ich biseche the thattow woldest iue me
that iche leuedi brißt on ble
that slepeth vnder the ympe-tre”.
“Nay”, quath the king, “that noußt nere!
A sori couple of 3ou it were,
for thou art lene, row, and blac, 460
and sche is louesum withouten lac;
a lothlich thing it were forthi
to sen hir in thi cómpaiñ”.

“O sir”, he seide, “gentil king,
yet were it a wel fouler thing
to here a lesing of thi mouthe,
so, sir, as je seide nouthe,
what ich wolde aski, haue I scholde,
and nedes thi word thou most holde”.

100
The king seide: “Seththen it is so,
take hir bi the hond and go;
of hir ichil thattow be blithe”.
He kneled adoune, and thonked him swithe;
his wif he tok bi the honde,
and dede him swithe out of that londe,
and wente him oute of that thede:
riȝt as he com the way he ȝede.

So long he hath the way ynōme,
to Winchester he is ycōme,
that was his owen citee;
ac no man knew that it was he.
No forther than the tounes ende
for knoweleche no durste he wende,
but with a begger in bilt ful narwe
ther he tok his herbarwe
to him and to his owen wif,
as menestrel of pouner lif;
and asked tidinges of that londe
and who the kingdom held in honde.
The pouner begger in his cot
told him euerich a grot:
hou her quen was stole owy
ten ȝer ygon with faiery;
and hou her king en exile ȝede,
but no man wiste in whiche thede;
and hou the steward the lond gan holde;
and other mani thing him tolde.

Amorwe, oȝain the none-tide,
hedde his wif ther abide;
the beggeres clothes he borwed anon,
and heng his harpe his rigge opon,
and wente him into that citee,
that men miȝte him biholde and se.
Erles and barounes bolde,
buriais and leuedis gunne him biholde.
“Lo!” thai seide, “swiche a man!
Hou long the her hongth him opan!
Lo, hou his berd hongth to his kne!
He isyclōnge also a tre!”

And as he ȝede bi the strete,
with his steward he gan mete,
and loude he sette on him a cri:
“Sir steward”, he seide, “merci!
Icham an harpoure of hethenesse;
help me now in this destresse!”
The steward seide: “Cóm with me, cóm!
Of that ichaue thou schalt haue sóm.
Euerich harpoure is welcôme me to
for mi lordes loue Sir Orfèo”.

In castel the steward sat atte mete,
and mani lording was bi him sete.
Ther were trômpours and tabourers,
harpours fele and crouders.
Miche melodie thai maked alle,
and Orfèo sat stille in halle,
and herkneth. When thai ben al stille,
he tok his harpe and tempred schille,
the blisfulest notes he harped there that euer man yherde with ere;
ich man liked wel his gle.

The steward biheld and gan y-se,
and knew the harpe also bluie.
“Menstrel”, he seide, “so mote thou thriue,
wher haddestow this harpe and hou?
I praye thattow me telle now”.
“Lord”, quath he, “in yncouthe thede,
thurʒ a wildernesse as I ʒede,
ther I founde in a dale
with liouns a man totore smale,
and wolues him frete with teth scharpe.

Bi him I find this iche harpe;
wel ten ʒer it is ygo”.
“O”, quath the steward, “now me is wo!
That was mi lord Sir Orfèo.
Allas! wreche, what schal I do,
that haue swiche a lord ylore?
A way! that euer ich was ybore!
that him was so harde grace ʒarked,
and so vile deth ymarked!”
Adoune he fel aswon to grounde.

His barouns him tok yp in that stounde
and telleth him hou it geth …
it is no bot of mannes deth.

King Orfèo knew wel bi than his steward was a trewe man
and loued him as he auȝte do,
and stont vp and seith thus: “Lo,
Steward, herkne now this thing:
ʒif ʒich were Orfeo the king,
and hadde ysuffred ful ʒore
in wildernesse miches sore,
and hadde ywōnne mi quen owy
out of the londe of faierie,
and hadde ybrouȝt the leuedi hende
riȝt here to the tounes ende,
and with a begger her in ʒōyme,
and were miselue hider ʒcōme
pouerliche to the, thus stille,
for to assaye thi gode wille,
and ʒif ʒich founde the thus trewe,
no schulde thow it neuer rewe:
sikerliche, for loue or aye,
thou schulde be king after mi daye.
And ʒif of mi deth thou hadde ben blithe,
thou schulde haue voided also swithe.”
Tho alle that therinne sete
that it was King Orfeo vnder ete,
and the steward him wel yknew;
ouer and ouer the bord he threw,
and fel adoune to his fete;
so dede euerich lord that there sete,
and alle seide at o crying:
“3e beth our lord, sir, and our king!”
Glade thai weren of  his liue.
To chaumbre thai ladde him also bliuie,
and bathed him and schof his berd,
and tird him as king apert.
And seththen with gret processioun
thai brouȝt the quen into the toun
with al manere menstracie.
O lord! ther was gret melodie!
For ioie thai wepe with her eijen
that hem so sounde ycōmen seijen.
Now Orfeo newe corouned is,
and eke his quen Dame Heurodis,
and longe liued afterward,
and seththen king was the steward.
Carl F. Hostetter

Harpours in Bretaine after than herde hou this meruaile bigan,
and made herof a lay of god liking
and nempned it after the king:
that lay is “Orfeo” yhote,
god is the lay, swete is the note.
Thus com Sir Orfeo out of care.
God graunte ous alle wel to fare.

[Tolkien’s editorial note]

There are three MSS. of this poem: A (Auchinleck, before 1350); H (Harley, fifteenth century); B (Bodleian, Ashmole, fifteenth century). The introduction, lines 1–24, and also lines 33–46, are from H. The rest of this version is based on A, though the spelling has in a few points been altered, and final -e has been restored or omitted in accordance with the grammar of earlier Southern English. In a few cases the lines have been emended by small changes, especially of word-order. The result is a much more metrical version than that offered even by MS. A, though several lines (as e.g. 96) remain obviously defective and corrupt. The defective rhymes of the MSS. in lines 81–2 (torett … witt); 149–50 (on hed … gold red); 157–8 (palays … ways); 381–2 (he wolde haue ydo … a minstrel, lo!) have been remodelled in accordance with evidence supplied by other poems of the same MS. (A) or of similar date and origin. Some rhymes, however, remain defective, as for instance 413 sete (for the sg. sat) with 414 swete.

Sir Orfeo appears to be a translation or adaptation made from a now lost Old French original in the thirteenth century in the South-East of England (that is probably in Essex); but it passed through several hands of copyists, or the mouths of reciters, between the author and the oldest surviving MS., and these, in addition to the corruptions of error and forgetfulness, have infected it with the forms of later language and different dialect: the influence of Northern and (probably) South-Western dialect can be detected in MS. A. The original appears to have used the old native form hye or he for sche and they (that), though these are the forms used in the MS. in all but a few cases (note the rhyme in 185–6). MS. A uses þ throughout for the th that is here substituted. ð is used for gh in the middle or ends of words; at the beginning of words it is the equivalent of modern y, as also in compounds: as vnderyete = underyete, 576.

Comparison of readings

With the exception of Tolkien’s substitution of th for þ throughout, his indications of short ə, and differences of single vs. double quote, all differences of orthography, form, word-order, and punctuation between Tolkien’s version and Sisam’s edition (imprint of 1928) are indicated, as of course are all additions by Tolkien. These notes, therefore, when used in conjunction with Tolkien’s Middle English Vocabulary, provide a key to Tolkien’s own gloss for nearly all forms. In the few cases where Sisam’s edition differs in a significant manner from Bliss’s edition (1954), this is also indicated. In these indications citations from Tolkien’s version are given in bold before a square bracket; those from the editions follow in italics. Readings from Bliss’s edition are preceded by an abbreviation indicating the source MS: A = Auchinleck; B = Ashmole 61 (Bodleian 6922); H = Harley 3810; L = Lay le Freyne (Auchinleck f.261a ff.).

Lines 1–24:— These lines, and ll. 33-46, corrupt in A, are provided by H. Sisam also gives these lines from H.
2. us] H vs. wite] wyte.
3. harping] harpyng.
6. ioye] H joy; L ioie.

Lines 7–8:— These lines follow ll. 9–10 in H. Sisam likewise transposes these lines. This ordering agrees with that of the corresponding lines of L:
“Sum bepe of iver and sum of ivo,
and sum of iowie and mirpe al-so,
and sum of trecherie and of gile,
of iver auentours pat fel while.”
8. while] wheyle.

10. fairie] fyrre.
12. of loue] o loue; H to love; L o loue.
15. filen] H fallen.
17. owher mighte yheren] myght owher heryn; H myst owher heryn.
18. weren] weryn.
19. harpes tho with] harpyw wip.
layes is perhaps not original. Lai le Freine has: And maked a lay and yaf it name” (209).

25. was yore a king] was a king; A was a kinge.
26. Ingelond a heij] Inglond an heije.
30. moder com of] moder of.
31. holde] yhold, .

Lines 33–46:— These lines, corrupt in A, are provided by H. Sisam also gives these lines from H.

33. onything] ony pinge.
34. loued] louede; H lovede. harping] harpyng.
38. laide] layde.
40. harpour] harper.
41. yborn] born.
42. euer] H onus. Bliss notes that “All editors except Ritson [Ancient English Metrical Romanceës, 1802] have printed euer for the onus of the manuscript” (55). befrom] byforn.
44. were] H wer.
46. harping] harpyng. suche melodie] suche ioy and melody. Cf. Sisam’s note: “joy and overload the verse, and are probably an unskilful addition to the text” (209).
47. soiourned] soiournd.
48. citee] cité.
51. He hadde with him] Pe king hadde. pris] prisy. With Tolkien’s metrically improved version cp. the corresponding lines of H: “He hap a quene, ful feyre of pris”; and of B: “And with hym hys quen of price.”
52. Heurodis] Herodis; A Heurodis.
53. leuedi for the nones] leuedi, for pe nones, .

106
54. miȝte] miȝt.
55. and godenesse] and of godenisse.
56. fairnesse] fairnise.
57. Bifel in] Bifel so in.
59. schoures] schours.
60. floures] flours.
63. iche] ich.
64. tok to hir maidenes two of pris ] Tok to maidens of priis, . With Tolkien’s metrically improved version cp. the corresponding line of H: “Toke with hur ii. maydenes of priis.”
65. wente hir in] went in.
67. springe] spring.
69. sette] sett. doune alle] doun al.
71. faire] fair.
72. maidnes durste] maidens durst.
74. but] bot. reste] rest.
75. afternon] afternone.
76. ydon] ydone.
78. cride] crid.
80. bledde wet] bled wete.
81. torende] torett.
82. rauissed| reuey<se>d; A reueyd. Cf. Sisam’s note: “reuey<se>d or some such form of ravished is probably right” (209); and cp. B ravysed. out of mende] out of hir witt.
83. two] two. maidnes] maidens.
85. but ounre] bot ourn. palais riȝt] palays ful riȝt.
86. tolde] told.
87. wolde] wold.
89. Kniȝtes and leuedis ounre tho] Kniȝtes vrn, and leuedis also, .
90. sexti damiseles] damisels sexti. mo; ] mo, .
91. quen] A quene.
93. to bed hye brouȝte hir] and brouȝt hir to bed. laste] last.
94. helde] held. faste] fast.
Carl F. Hostetter

95. one] o.
96. wolde] wold. and wende owy] and owy.
97. herde] herd.
100. chaumbre] chaumber. biforn] bifor.
103. set] zete.
105. whit] white.
108. is now al] is al.
111. louesome] louesom. two] to.
117. laste] last.
118. haste] fast.
122. wrothe] wrop.
123. but] bot.
124. lif] liif.
130. I] y.
131. nis. ] nis;.
133. lay in this] lay pis.
135. two faire] to fair.
136. wel] wele.
138. king] A kinge.
139. answerde] answerd. bolde] bold.
141. miyte] miyst.
144. damiseles] damisels.
146. milk] milke.
148. faire creatures] fair creatours.
149. a croune hadde on his molde] hadde a croun on hed.
150. rede golde] gold red.
151. al on] of a.
152. briête so] brist as.
153. sone] son.
154. wolde] wold. nolde[ nold.
155. palfray ] palfray .
156. brouște] broust. palise] palays.
158. wel atired in iche wise] wele atird in ich ways. With ll. 157–58
   cf. Sisam’s note: “The original rime was perhaps palys: wys ‘wise’” (209); and cp. H palys: y-wys.
161. brouște] broust.
163. owen] owhen.
164. seide] said.
165. dame, that tow] dame, to-morwe patow. Cf. Sisam’s note to l. 102:
   “assimilation of unlike sounds, as patow 165 for pat how” (209).
166. to-morwe her] rist here. With Tolkien’s metrically improved version of ll. 165–66 cp. the corresponding lines of B: “And seyd, ‘Madam, loke / to-morrow here, vnder [ys tre.’”
172. helpe] help.
173. theis] þei.
174. jet] zete.
175. herde] herd.
177. lif] liif.
178. wif] wiif.
180. helpe him] him help. With Tolkien’s metrically improved version
   cp. the corresponding line of B: “Bot no man helpe hym ne canne.”
185. quene] quen.
188. saide] sayd. wolde ther] wolde þere.
189. die there] dye þer.
191. jet] zete.
192. quene] quen. ytwiʒt] ytwiʒt; A y-twįʒt.
193. fairie was forth] faire forþ.
194. niste wher] wist neuer wher. With Tolkien’s metrically improved version cp. the corresponding line of B: “The ne wyst wer sche was com.”
196. chaumbre] chamber.
197. ofte] oft.
199. neiz] neize. lif] liif; was al yspent] was yspent.
202. erles] els.
203. alle] al.
204. saide] said. biforn] bifor.
208. oueral] ouer al.
209. For] For.
211. I]y.
212. wildernes] wildernes.
218. thing. A pinge.
220. grete] grete.
221. mijten olde or jöinge] miȝt old or ſong.
223. adoun alle] adoun al.
224. praid] praid.
227. forsok] forsoke.
229. nadde no kirtel, no no hod] no hadde kirtel no hode.
230. scherte, no non other god] schert, <no> no noþer gode.
232. of] atte.
233. moste] most.
234. wep] wepe.
235. he that er was king] he, þat hadde ben king. crowne] crown.
236. wente] went. toune] toun.
237. Thurgh] Thurch; A Parch.
238. wildernesse] wildernes.
239. aise] ays.
240. but] bot, malaise] malais.
241. He hadde ywered fow and gris] He pat hadde ywered þe fowe and gris.
242. bedde purpre bis; ] bed þe purper biis.
244. and with gresse him] and gresse he him.
245. He hadde yhad] He þat hadde had.
249. He hade yhad] He þat had yhad. pris] þris.
252. but] bot.
254. deintee] deyté.
257. wilde frute] wild frut.
258. but] bot.
261. ydwine] duine.
263. tellen al the] telle þe.
265. her and berd, al blake] here of his berd, blac.
266. were] was.
267. harpe] harp.
269. and when] and, when. cler] clere.
271. owen] owhen.
273. It is unclear why Tolkien has bracketed “[bestes].” It appears in A, and has no brackets in Sisam.
276. brere ] brere.
277. a-fine] afine.
279. wolde] wold.
280. nolde] nold.
281. mijte] miȝt.
282. hote] hote.
Faerie|fairy. route| rout.
cômen hunten| com to hunt. aboute| about.
blowinge| blowinge.
berkinge| wip him berking.
neuer| no.
niste| nist.
miȝte| miȝt.
wel| wele.
manie desplayed| mani desplaid.
ydrawen holde;| ydrawe hold.
niste| nist. wolde| wold.
seij| seije.
come dauncing| com daunceing.
queinte| queynt.
queinte| queynt. softly:| softly;.
trumpes| trupes. bi| bi.
manere| maner.
seij| seije.
horse| hors.
ris:| ris—.
nis| per nis.
honde| hond.
hauking| haukin.
god| gode. haunt:| haunt.
maulard, hairoun| maulardes, hayroun. cormeraunt.
manere| maner.
The| þe.
wel| wele.
praye| pray.
seij| seije. Orfeo| Orfeo.
ywône| ywoun.
arios| aros.
wel| wele.
owen| oxwen. Dame| Dam.
ërne| ërn. ek| eke.
spek| speke.
misaise| messais. seij| seije.
hadde] had. hei] so heiȝe.
yseijen] yseige.
leng] lenger.
die] dye. thisse siȝte] pis siȝt.
herte breke!] hert breke?
what] wat.
thise] pis.
ichille streche] ichil streche.
sclauine] sclauain.
hadde] had. god] gode. gon: ] gon,—.
spared] spard.
cuntraye] cuntray.
sõmeres daye] somers day.
nas non] nas ber non.
vtemaste] vtmast.
cler] clere. schene] schine (cf. the entry Schene in Tolkien’s Vocabulary).
aboute] about.
golde] gold.
manere] maner. animal] A aumal; see the Appendix.
Withinne] Wipin. were] wer.
werste] werst.
was the therke] schuld be þerk and.
Carl F. Hostetter

371. liȝte] liȝt.
372. none sönne] none þe sonne.
376. liȝte] aliȝt.
380. redi was] was redi.
381. his wille were] he wold haue ydo.
382. harpere, ] a minstrel, lo! Cf. Sisam’s note to this line): “The line is too long” (210).
383. thi lord to solace] To solas þi lord.
386. let] let. in] into.
388. seiȝ ther] seiȝ ðful†. Sisam indicates with daggers that ful in this line is a corruption; he suggests that perhaps “ful should be deleted as a scribe’s anticipation of folk in the next line” (210-11).
389. folk] of folk (see previous note). thider were] were péder.
392. no fet no armes nadde] non armes nade.
393. thurȝ purcȝ; Æ purth. bodi] þe bodi.
394. ther laye] lay.
397. in water were adreinte] were in water adreynt.
398. were forschreinte] al forschreynt.
399. laye] lay.
400. were dede] ded, .
401. laye] lay.
404. and thider with fairie] wip fairi þider.
406. leue liif] lef liif.
407. slepen] slepe.
408. hir wede] her clopes. knew] kneve.
409. When he biheld thise meruailes] And when he hadde bihold þis meruailes.
410. wente] went.
411. seiȝ] seiȝe.
412. blissful, briȝt; ] blisful and briȝt..
413. therinne [Perin. him sete] sete.
414. quene, ] quen.
415. briyte ] briêt, .
416. biholden hem he miâte] bihold he hem miêt.
419. and seide: “O lord, jif thi wille were] “O lord,” he seyd, “jif it þi wille were.” Cf. Sisam’s note to l. 382: “l. 419 may once have been: And seyd ‘Lord, jif þi wille were.’” (210); also note B: “And seyd: ‘Lord, and þi wyll were.”
420. schulde] schust.
424. sente] sent.
425. her] here.
427. durste] durst.
431. manere] maner.
433. thei] þei. welcôme] welcom no.
434. jet] sete.
437. it ] his harp, . wel] wele.
438. blissfule] blisseful.
441. adoune] adoun.
442. melodie] melody.
444. god] gode.
447. stint harping] stint his harping.
448. seide to him than] þan seyd to him.
449. wel] wele; A wel.
452. assaye] asay.
453. seide] seyd.
454. thattow] batow.
459. row] rowe.
460. lousesum] lousesome, .
462. cōmpaini] compayni.
463. seide] seyd.
466. seide] seyd.
468. thi word thou most holde] þou most þi word hold.
469. seide] seyd.
470. hond] hond, .
471. thattow] patow.
472. adoune] adoun. Sisam begins a new paragraph with this line.
474. londe] lond.
476. com] come.
479. owen citee] owhen cité.
480. knew] knewe.
482. no durste he] <he> no durst.
483. but] bot. in bilt] y<n> bilt; A y-bilt. narwe] narwe, .
484. herbarwe] herbarwe, .
485. owen wif] owhen wiif.
487. londe] lond, .
488. honde] hond.
489. cot] cote.
490. tolde] told.
495. holde] hold.
496. thing] þinges. tolde] told.
497. oþain the none-tide] oþain nonetide.
498. wif] wiif.
499. beggeres] beggers.
500. harpe] harp.
506. her hongth] here hongep.
507. hongth] hongep.
508. yclônge] yclongen.
509. bi] in. H has by.
512. seide] seyd.
513. hethenesse] hepenisse.
516. söm] some.
519. In castel] In þe castel.
521. trŏmpours] trompour<s>.
522. fele ] fele, .
523. melodie] melody.
524. in halle] in þe halle.
527. blisfullest] bli<sse>fulest.
528. euer man yherde] euer ani man yherd.
529. wel] wele.
530. y-se] yse.
537. I] y.
539. tethe scharpe] tēþ so scharp.
544. I] y.
546. that euer ich] that ich.
547. harde] hard.
Adoune [Adoun.
stounde] stounde,.

knew wel] knewe wele.
aust do] ayst to do.

sieder] sieder.

is nis. manes] manes; A manes.
knew wel] knewe wele.
aust do] ayst to do.

knewe wele.

au do] au to do.

mises] mises.

knewe wele.

au do] au to do.

seyt.

faiery.

mises] mises.

knewe wele.

au do] au to do.

fet.

er.

al ai seyd crying.

Glade [Glad. weren] were.

chaumber] chaumber. also blieue] als biliue.

him] him, schaued.

as king] as a king.

broust] broust. toun] toun,.

maner menstraci] maner menstraci.

O lord!] Lord! grete melody] grete melody.

eize.

seize.

and eke his] and his.

liued long afterward;.
Tolkien’s Middle English Sir Orfeo

596. king was | was king.
598. herde | herd.
599. god liking | gode likeing.
600. king: | king;.
601. is “Orfeo” | “Orfeo” is.
602. god | gode.
603. out of care | out of his care.
604. graunte | graunt. wele | wele.

Revisions to the printed text of 1944

Tolkien’s pencilled revisions (incorporated into text)

l. 75: afternone > afternon
l. 76: ydone > ydon
l. 96: and owy > and wende owy
l. 281: Hi > He
l. 309: haunt > haunt:
l. 600: nemoned > nempned

l. 11: se > se,

l. 70: Vnder > vnder

l. 192: ytwiț > ytwiț,

l. 323: ȝerne > ȝerne

l. 381: were > were.

l. 391: sum > Sum

l. 452: assaye.” > assaye”.

l. 453: “Sir,” > “Sir”;

l. 456: ympe-tre.” > ympe-tre”.

l. 457: “Nay,” > “Nay”,

l. 521: tabourers > tabourers,

l. 533: Wher > wher

l. 568: wille > wille,

l. 582: ȝe > ȝe

l. 587: and > And

Note: Auchinlech > Auchinleck
Editorial changes

Appendix: Revisions to Sisam’s Fourteenth Century Verse and Prose due to Tolkien

The first edition (1922) of Tolkien’s Middle English Vocabulary contains the following corrigenda to Sisam’s text:

- p. xlv, l. 7: for carat read caret
- p. xlvii: for Jessop read Jessopp
- p. 21, l. 259: for be read he
- p. 28, l. 493: for enn read en
- p. 43, footnote to l. 69: omit “for:”
- p. 62, l. 100: for tyst read t<r>yste (Morris); and adjust note at p. 225.
- p. 103, l. 254: for large and read large and
- p. 175, l. 1: for Daib. read Diab. [sic; l. 1 of the page, but l. 99 of the poem —CFH]
- p. 214, note to a: for “The best . . . are” read “This poem is largely a translation of sentences excerpted from Rolle’s Incendium Amoris, cc. xl–xli (Miss Allen in Mod. Lang. Review for 1919, p. 320). Useful commentaries are”
- p. 226, note to l. 153: in l. 8 for t̜ read t̜
- p. 243, n. to ll. 5–6: for “external covering” read “covering over it”
- p. 291, table, last column, 1 sg.: for “-e or (e)s” read “(e) or (e)s”

Sisam’s text was corrected in exact accordance with these corrigenda when it was reprinted in 1923.

In 1945 (according to Bliss, see below; the earliest example I have seen is in the 1946 impression), the entry Animal (Sir Orfeo l. 364) in the Vocabulary was altered from:

Animal, n. animal, ii 364. [OFr. animal.]

in the first edition (1922) to:

Animal, n. ii 364, a misreading for aumal q.v.

at the same time adding this entry:

Aumal, n. enamel, ii 364. [OFr. aumail.]

Line 364 of Sisam’s text of Sir Orfeo was corrected accordingly by 1967 (but not as of 1950). Presumably at the same time animal was emended to aumal, the following was added to Sisam’s notes on Sir Orfeo (Sisam 1967 210):
364. aumal, “enamel.” Holthausen’s correction for animal (Anglia, vol. xlii, p. 427) is confirmed by the MS.

The reference is to the following in Holthausen’s 1918 article, “Zum mittelenglischen Romanzen” (“On the Middle English Romances”):

Animal ist sinnlos, O bietet amell, H metalle. Ersteres wird richtig sein, vgl. das NED. unter amel “email.” Natürlich wäre hier emal zu schreiben.

Animal is senseless, [MS Ashmole 51] offers amell, [MS Harley 3810] metalle. The first would be correct, compare the OED under amel “enamel.” It would be natural to write emal here.

Holthausen’s misgivings about animal are apparently motivated solely by a judgment that it yields an inappropriate sense. There is no indication in his article that he based his preferred reading, emal, on an examination of the Auchinleck MS itself.

By contrast, Bliss, in his first edition of Sir Orfeo (1954), reading directly from the MS, gives the form as aumal (32), noting:

364. All editors have printed animal for aumal, although there are only five minims in the manuscript, and although the noun animal is not recorded until the end of the sixteenth century (OED s.v.). The correct reading was pointed out by Professor J. R. R. Tolkien (A Middle English Vocabulary, impression of 1945, s.v. animal) (54).

However, in the second edition (1966), Bliss revised this note to read:

364. All editors have printed animal for aumal, although there are only five minims in the manuscript, and although the noun animal is not recorded until the end of the sixteenth century (OED s.v.). The correct reading was first published by Professor C. L. Wrenn, TPS [Transactions of the Philological Society] (1943), 33. See RES [Review of English Studies] N.S. viii (1957), 58 footnote 4 (54).

(The citation in Wrenn reads: “Auchinleck’s aumal, then, may well be an error for aumal (u and n scribal confusion), which is a quite plausible form of amal,” that of RES is to Tolkien’s student and protégé S.R.T.O. d’Ardenne’s review of the first edition of Bliss’s Sir Orfeo, to which the RES editor supplied this footnote: “The reading aumal seems to have been published first by Professor C. L. Wrenn in ‘The Value of Spelling as Evidence,’ Trans. Phil. Soc., 1943, p. 33; but the manuscript had been so read by Miss S. I. Tucker in 1938.”)

121
Hence, although Sisam’s note correctly refers to Holthausen as first noticing the difficulty with the reading animal, it was not he but Wrenn who first published the correct MS reading aumal. It appears that Wrenn, not Tolkien, was ultimately responsible for the change in the Vocabulary—that Tolkien’s Middle English version of Sir Orfeo, printed in 1944, has the reading animal suggests that he did not himself arrive at the correct reading aumal before 1944, and thus after Wrenn—but it may be presumed that it was Tolkien who was proximately responsible for it. It is interesting to note that Tolkien’s English translation of l. 364 (Tolkien 1975 131), “with beasts and birds and figures horned,” shows that he still read animal when he made the translation, suggesting that he made his translation before 1945.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I am grateful to Wayne Hammond for providing me with a photocopy of Tolkien’s Middle English version of Sir Orfeo, and for suggesting this study of it. I am further grateful to Wayne and to Christina Scull and Arden R. Smith for their assistance in the pursuit of various references and in researching the revisions to Tolkien’s Vocabulary and Sisam’s reader. I also thank the Tolkien Estate for their very kind permission to republish the complete text of Tolkien’s version of Sir Orfeo.

NOTES

1 In his preface to Sir Gawain, Christopher Tolkien notes that at that time (1975) he was “not able to discover any writing by my father on the subject of Sir Orfeo” other than the “very brief factual note on the text” that is given in the introduction (8). He was unaware at that time of the existence of his father’s Middle English version (private correspondence). (Tolkien did in fact leave some writings on the poem, not seen by this editor, now held by the Bodleian Library.)

2 A judgment notably not shared by Sisam, who describes its dialect as South-Western (cf. 13, 207).

3 This despite the restructuring of sentences sometimes required by verse translation. It should be noted, however, that it will be argued below that the formatting and punctuation of the Middle English version is due to that of Sisam’s edition; hence that of Tolkien’s translation may also be due to Sisam, directly or indirectly.
WORKS CITED

Sisam, Kenneth. Fourteenth Century Verse and Prose. Oxford: The Clarendon Press, 1921. I also make specific reference to the imprints of 1923, 1928, 1946, 1950, and 1967, each of which was (slightly) revised from previous versions. Where no imprint is specified, references apply to any of these imprints.

Tolkien, J.R.R. A Middle English Vocabulary. Oxford: The Clarendon Press, 1922. I also make specific reference to the imprint of 1945, which was (slightly) revised from previous versions. Where no imprint is specified, references apply to any of these imprints.

